A new pro-life billboard campaign in California has a clear message for the African-American community: Fatherhood begins in the womb. That's what a group of black pro-life advocates want people to know.

Walter Hoye, a pro-life African-American pastor, teamed up with Radiance Foundation founder Ryan Bomberger, a LifeNews blogger who is a black pro-life and adoption advocate, for the new professional billboard campaign.

The Radiance Foundation, partnering with the Issues4Life Foundation, announces a powerful new billboard/web campaign to illuminate the crisis of fatherlessness. The new TooManyAborted.com billboards, "Fatherhood begins in the womb", have been placed in Sacramento, California, the state that has aborted 214,190 of its children in the last reported year, Bomberger says.

“When a child is conceived, a father is born,” Bomberger told LifeNews.

“The abortion industry has created a culture of abandonment. Responsibility has become someone else’s concern, and death the solution to ‘unplanned’ pregnancies—the natural result of sexual behavior,” Bomberger explains. “There’s nothing natural about an industry that generates over $200 million, annually, by killing a child left defenseless by the absence of a father.”

Hoye says the billboard campaign focuses on the most missing component of the national abortion debate: fathers. He said the campaign details the culture of abandonment that abortion has created by revealing the statistics of fatherlessness, single-parent poverty, and the deterioration of two-parent married households.
